The Mutillidae are a family of more than 3,000 species of wasps whose wingless females resemble large, hairy ants. Their common name velvet ant refers to their dense pile of hair, which most often is bright scarlet or orange, but may also be black, white, silver, or gold. Black and white specimens are sometimes known as panda ants due to their hair coloration resembling that of the giant panda.

The active ingredient, borax, is a naturally-occurring mineral. [I've been washing clothes with it for over 60 years.] If it were my pets, I wouldn't have any concerns [they don't seem the least interested]; the bait is sweetened to attract ants and is normally inaccessible to other critters.
